If you bet on in-app purchases, iOS seems a better choice again. There's a popular opinion that Apple customers earn higher incomes, spend more time on their smartphones, and spend more money than Android users. Stereotype or not, but mobile app spending is expected to reach $161 billion on the Apple App Store by 2

026, compared with $72 billion on the Google Play Store.

One of the likely reasons behind the iOS apps' decreasing ad revenue is the introduction of App Tracking Transparency (ATT). Developers now must ask for user consent to show them personalized ads. Most users opt out, which results in lower eCPM and total ad revenue.

It's essential to analyze the market and learn from your competitors' experiences. Search for similar products and find out what they offer, their UX/UI design, and monetization methods.
